Also known as desktop sharing, screen sharing is the practice of sharing the content of your computer screen with another device or multiple devices. It allows the second user to see everything the screen-sharing user is seeing, including everything the screen-sharing user is doing. Screen sharing can also be limited to an application to avoid sharing everything on the sharer's desktop. As an increasing amount of business is now done over the internet, screen sharing has become critical for things such as: Quick collaboration between coworkers Client presentations Technical support for those looking to solve a computer issue. Screen sharing is useful for online training because trainers are able to show trainees the exact process through demonstration. With the increase of employees working remotely, many businesses use video conferencing tools with screen sharing features included to keep everyone on the same page. How screen sharing works Screen sharing works by breaking down information depicted on a computer's screen into encoded packets of information. The information is then sent across the internet to another device. The receiving device rebuilds the image received from the other screen. Advancements in screen sharing software can both compress the data to minimize bandwidth requirements and also monitor activity on the screen. The software will only transmit information when a change or movement occurs. Screen sharing software Screen sharing is an included feature in different types of applications, such as web conferencing or collaboration software. There are applications that offer screen sharing as their main functionality. Vendors offering screen sharing as the primary function include: TeamViewer Dead Simple Screen Sharing Screenleap Video conferencing vendors offering screen sharing as a feature include: If you use Skype, you don't need an expensive conferencing service to show your friends or colleagues something on your screen. The original video-chat service has long supported a screen-sharing feature, provided you launch it from a desktop version of the app. Instructions in the article apply to Skype on Windows 10, macOS, Linux, Android, and iOS. Skype for Business is also addressed on the platforms where it's available. Additionally, While Skype is available for web browsers, the Screen Share feature is not. There's one common requirement when you want to share your screen. You must be engaged in a voice call with your contact. You don't need the sound, but it's useful to explain what's happening on the screen. When you're in a voice call, you can show someone what's on your screen, though your sharing capabilities vary by platform: Windows, macOS, and Linux One person can share a screen with everyone on the call. Android and iOS: You can take still snapshots, but not share the screen. Recent versions of Skype have come a long way to make the application consistent across desktop operating systems. When you're connected to a call, Skype provides a one-click process to share your screen that's similar across all platforms. Select the Share screen icon in the lower-right corner of the screen. If you have more than one monitor or display, select which one you'd like to share. Click Share Screen to start. Confirm what's being shared. Skype places a yellow border around the screen. To stop sharing, either select the Share screen icon again or hang up the call. Skype for Business is Microsoft's corporate version of Skype. It comes from their previous messenger called Lync. The process to share your screen is similar to the consumer version of Skype, as you need to be in a voice call, but the on-screen controls are slightly different. In a video call, select the Share Content icon at the bottom of the screen, second from the right. Select Share your Desktop to share the entire desktop or select Share a Window to share a single window. Use this menu to stop sharing or end the call. Mobile devices can't share live screencasts in calls, but these devices can share screenshots. Screen sharing is the equivalent of video. If you're on a mobile network, it uses your data rapidly. Unless you're only text chatting while using Skype, access a Wi-Fi network to avoid overage charges. On iOS or Android, tap the Plus when you're on a call. This tap displays the actions you can take during a call. Tap Snapshot. Skype takes a snapshot of your screen and automatically inserts it into the call's text chat. You may not notice it with the voice call taking up the full screen, but the chat indicator in the lower-left corner of the screen shows a new message. That's where you'll find the picture of your screen. Others in the call can view or download the screenshot, so be careful what else is on the screen when you capture it. While you can't send your screen to other callers, you can receive shared screens on a mobile device. It appears in the center of the screen but might be too small to be useful. Like most high-throughput internet features, screen sharing doesn't always work as planned. Here are some common problems and solutions: If you start screen sharing and your callers report nothing appears, turn the feature off then back on again. This toggling is also the fix to a frozen screen, for example, when you move around the screen but callers report they don't see any changes. If starting and stopping the screen share doesn't work, exit the call and then reconnect. Screen sharing over the internet makes it subject to traffic spikes and other network barriers, meaning it's not the best option to share something that requires a high quality of service. There's not a fix for this one, only a caveat to not use Skype to stream, for example, a video game if you want to maintain high quality. Thanks for letting us know! How To Share Screen Google Meet Web Hero (Image credit: Jeremy Johnson / Android Central) Whether you're socially distancing or if working from home is the norm for you, a video conferencing tool like Google Meet can be a lifesaver for staying connected and productive. However, sometimes you need a bit more firepower than your smiling face, particularly when you want to show your colleagues what you're talking about. So we'll show you the simple steps to share your screen during your next Google Meet session. From an active Google Meet call, click on the Present Screen icon at the bottom center of the screen (looks like a box with an upward-facing arrow). Source: Android Central (Image credit: Source: Android Central) Choose whether you want to share your entire screen, a specific window, or a specific Chrome tab. Source: Android Central When you're done sharing your screen, click the blue button at the top left of the screen that says Stop. Source: Android Central (Image credit: Source: Android Central) From there, you'll need to click back to the active Google Meet tab to see the rest of your team. Sharing your screen from a computer like one of the best Chromebooks is the preferred method because you have more options as to what you can present. It's just a more natural user interface in general. However, if you're stuck on a mobile device, you're not out of luck, as there is a way to share your phone's screen as well. From an active Google Meet call, tap on the three-dot menu in the bottom right corner of the screen. Tap on Share screen. Source: Android Central Tap on Start sharing. Confirm that you wish to share whatever appears on your screen (including notifications) by tapping Start Now. Tap Stop sharing when you are finished presenting. Source: Android Central The best use of this is to walk your team through features (or issues) that you're trying to show off in an app or website or if you just want to share some content and you're not in a position to do so from your computer. Of course, it's not necessarily ideal for that second scenario, but at least it's there to help you get the job done! When you want to share your smartphone's screen to help troubleshoot your handset, you have to use a remote control app or send a screen recording. Now, you can use the Skype app to easily share your iPhone or Android screen. How to Share Your Android Screen Using Skype Open the Skype app on your Android smartphone and make sure that you're running the latest version (it works for Android 6.0 and higher). Before you get started, you'll have to give the app permission to access audio and video recording capabilities on your device. Now navigate to a conversation where you want to share your screen and tap on the "Video Call" button. Once the call has been accepted, you'll see the familiar video calling interface. Here, tap on the three-dot Menu button in the bottom-right corner. Now, choose the "Share screen" option. Android will ask you if you want to share your screen using the Skype app. Here, tap on "Start Now". If you don't want the app to ask you every time you use the feature, check the "Don't Ask Again" box. The screen sharing will begin. You can exit the Skype app and switch to the app or the screen you want to show to the person on the other end of the call. Once you're done, you can come back to the Skype app and then tap on the "Stop sharing" button at the top of the screen to stop sharing your screen. You can continue the call if you wish or you can tap on the red "End Call" button to end the call. How to Share Your iPhone Screen Using Skype The process for sharing the screen on your iPhone or iPad is slightly different. The Skype app uses the screen recording and broadcast feature first introduced in iOS 11. On your iPhone or iPad, open the Skype app and navigate to the conversation where you want to share the screen. Here, tap on the Video Call button in the top toolbar. Once the video call starts, tap on the three-dot Menu button. From here, select the "Share Screen" option. You'll see a full-screen overlay on the screen telling you about the Broadcast feature. You'll see the Skype app on the list. Tap "Skype" to select it and then tap on the "Start Broadcast" button. You'll see a red pill around the time in the top-left corner (or a red bar on top of the screen on older iPhones and iPads). This means that you're now sharing your device's screen. If it doesn't work on the first try, stop the screen sharing and try again). You can now navigate to other apps and Skype will continue to record and share your screen to the caller on the other end. When you're done, you can come back to the Skype app and then tap on the "Stop sharing" button. Alternatively, you can also tap on the Red Pill button in the top-left corner of the screen. If you want, you can go back to the Menu and share your screen again. Once you're done, tap on the red "End Call" button to stop the video call. You can use a similar built-in feature called Screen Recording to directly record your iPhone or iPad screen.
